soljankaprojekt asked: The Estonian food-bloggers Nami-Nami and Sandra Vungi-Vegan mentioned in their posts that Solyanka is popular in Estonia. Do you or your Estonian followers know of any musts for making this soup/stew in a specifically Estonian way? Also what memories/ideas do you or your Estonian followers have associated with the soup? Thank you so much! <3

> Solyanka, or Seljanka as Estonians say it, is an item that has been seen often on Estonian food table. Not as often as it used to be, but still.

> My research indicated that Estonians might put slightly more onion into the soup than Russians, but otherwise, it's done as in Russia - Estonians still consider it a staple of Russian cuisine, not our own one, so no modifications are done to it.
